Good afternoon.

We hope this email finds you doing well.

Hurricane Idalia is expected to hit the Gulf coast of Florida as a major hurricane early morning on Wednesday, August 30. It is expected to rapidly weaken upon making landfall. Considering we are still approximately 36 hours away from the storm moving through our area, we are unsure of the extent of impacts to expect.

According to the most recent forecast, it's likely that the most significant impacts on our coast will be felt between Wednesday evening and the early morning hours on Thursday. We should have a better understanding of the projected forecast and the potential impacts within the next 24 hours.

We will continue to monitor the storm projections and provide email updates. Currently, there have not been any mandatory evacuations ordered by Governor Henry McMaster.

Based on the current forecast, here's what we will likely expect to see.

- Gusts up to 40mph
- Storm surge up to 2 feet
- Peak rainfall ranges from 3-6 inches
- Heavy rain likely with flooding possible

Keep in mind the slightest shift in the forecast could significantly increase or decrease the impacts we may see.*
